"This is a remarkable Hands-On-Science book for gifted students. Sganga has provided them with an advanced differentiated curriculum in a challenging and stimulating format." Michael E. Walters, Teacher and Author. Emphasizes Hands-On-Science lessons in teaching a difficult subject. Includes numerous Tables, Illustrations and Figures. Presents extensive lists of questions (Memory Checks) for the student to answer at the end of each chapter. The Appendix contains detailed answers to these questions. The book is organized in an interesting and challenging format from the simple to the complex, and from general to specific information about essential principles of general chemistry. ABOUT THE AUTHOR -- Francis (Frank) Sganga received his B.S. and M.A. degrees at the University of Florida where, as a graduate student, he taught for two years. After working with the U.S. Corps of Engineers for two years, he succumbed to an urge to teach, and wound up spending six years teaching chemistry and physics at the high school level. Teachers' salaries being what they were, his income did not meet the needs of a family of five, so he decided to move into administration. After three years as a teaching principal at a small rural school in Oak Hill, Florida, his performance earned him a promotion to the position of K-12 Science and Mathematics Consultant at the "county level." At the time there were 55 schools in the system. In his supervisory role he spent a significant amount of time doing demonstration teaching in gifted classes, as well as conducting in-service workshops for their teachers and teachers of regular classes. For two years he taught a hands-on science course at the local junior college to elementary and junior high school teachers.
