The modification of U.S. street cars in order to achieve increased performance has been an American tradition since the 1920s. With the influx of foreign cars, this activity has, quite appropriately, spilled over to include automobiles produced outside the US, with Honda quickly becoming the manufacturer of choice. This first ever work takes an in-depth look at what enthusiasts are doing to increase performance of Honda products. Included are lighting fast drag cars, impressive street sleepers, and beautiful examples of metal/body work.
