Children young and old will enjoy this story about a little boy's curiosity when "something big and green with a white belly" swam by in the nearby brook. This story from the author's childhood is about how he and his mother found tadpoles that later turned into frogs, and how the sights and sounds of the little brook and the surroundings came alive. The illustrations are simple, colorful and true to the Adirondack setting where the story occurred nearly 50 years ago.

This wistful children's story from two of the Adirondack's well known singer/songwriters, Jim Goff and Speedy Arnold, will delight your children time and time again.
